Fortnite is a free game to play, but some players are spending thousands of dollars on it. The popular battle royale-style game is posting record sales every month. Fortnite earned $300 million in April, according to gaming research firm SuperData. Players exchange real money for in-game currency called v-Bucks. Gamers use v-Bucks to buy new skins, accessories and expressions for their avatars. Developer Fortnite Epic Games offers different character interfaces almost every day, causing some players to miss out on some cosmetic upgrades. Gamers can also purchase Fortnite accounts and services on non-official markets such as eBay. Sellers use the online market to auction fully loaded accounts with leather, expressions and accessories. After an agreement is reached, the seller completes the sale by providing the buyer with the email and password attached to the advertised account. While some players will cover out thousands of purchases entirely of cosmetics, others may choose to spend on grinding their skills or at least padding their stats. Players can also find coaching sessions on these markets for about $20 an hour. Others offered to log into the buyer's account to increase their statistics in exchange for cash. These auctions can range from $3 to $6,000. But these markets can also be used for more illegal transactions. In March, they flooded with deep discount access codes for Fortnite games. Many players claim that their accounts have been hacked by hackers, saying they have seen fraudulent charges on their accounts. Epic Games has strengthened its security measures and made efforts to warn players about scammers. The studio has published a sensational screen advising gamers to protect their login information. Despite all the compromised accounts, players have been relentlessly dishing out thousands on Fortnite. Whether it is through Fortnite's official market or the official website, players will spend some serious cash on the game. You may have discovered Fortnite accounts for sale on eBay, or various online auction sites, and perhaps wondered if you should buy or sell an account yourself. If you have some rare interfaces that can no longer be acquired in the game, or you want those interfaces and can not access them by the usual means, buying or selling accounts seems like the only option. Unfortunately, this comes with some drawbacks, which can cause you to experience a bit of a sticky situation. Here's what you need to know about Fortnite accounts for sale. Whether you are considering Fortnite accounts for sale because you want to buy one yourself or you prefer to sell your own account, you should know that the Terms of Service of the game prohibit these types of actions. You can only access the Services through your own account. Users do not own their account, and gift giving or transfer of accounts or access keys are prohibited. Not only can you be scammed with your money or account, but you may also be punished by Epic Games. It really doesn't seem worth it, even for Skins. Fortnite account for sale: Why would you buy an account? Players can look at Fortnite accounts for sale because they desire a rare skin. For example, the season 1 interface is no longer available to buy or monet the game. Fortnite skins are featured in a Season Battle Pass that is intended to earn exclusively during the season. Fortunately, for players that really, really want a skin, but don't want to risk buying an account on eBay, Epic Games has teased a business feature that would be the perfect solution, offering you the ability to find a very good friend who will give you their skin! Skins!
